

THE PREHISTORY OF THE ANDES: ARCHAEOLOGY AND LINGUISTICS

A series of papers by leading international scholars in a range of disciplines.

SACKLER ROOMS, BRITISH MUSEUM, TUESDAY 16TH SEPTEMBER 2008

TIME	SPEAKER(S)	THEME
10:00	Dr Colin McEwan	Welcome.
10:15	Prof. Willem Adelaar	Linguistic Oddities of the Andes. A tour of weird and wonderful language survivors from the pre-Columbian Andes: the 'Taki', ritual chant of Inkawasi and the last gasps of the speech of the Moche empire; Puquina, the language of Tiahuanaco fossilised only in the jargon of the itinerant medicine-men of Callahuaya; Uro, the language of the 'semi-human' water-men of the floating islands of Titicaca; and Jaqaru and Kawki, the last beleaguered redoubts of 'Central Aymara'...
11:00	Prof. Peter Kaulicke	Origins of Social Complexity in Ancient Peru. 'Oldest City in the Americas'? 'First State in the New World'? Dotted along the desert coastal strip of north-central Peru, Caral and a host of associated archaeological sites enjoy exceptional preservation conditions. Discoveries here have prompted radical revisions and heated debate in archaeological circles far beyond the Andes. With their reliance on maritime resources as much as agriculture, and their 'Pre-Ceramic' classification in the archaeological chronology, Peru's 'Norte Chico' seems to challenge Old World preconceptions as to the building-blocks required for complex societies to arise...
11:45	COFFEE BREAK
12:00	Prof. William Isbell	Imperial Ideology: Re-evaluating Religious Iconography Shared by Wari and Tiwanaku (A.D. 600-1000).
13:00	LUNCH BREAK
14:15	Dr David Beresford-Jones & Dr Paul Heggarty	Towards a Coherent Prehistory for the Andean Peoples: Bringing Together the Archaeological and Linguistic Stories. From southernmost Colombia to north-west Argentina, the linguistic landscape of the Andes is dominated by two language families. Their present-day distributions have long misled observers into assuming that Quechua came from Cuzco with the Incas, and Aymara from Tiahuanaco. Linguistic evidence explodes these popular myths, but the true origins of these languages remain disputed even among specialists. Much hinges on the crucial role of Wari; we put forward a radically new scenario to weave the archaeological and linguistic stories at last into a holistic human prehistory for the Andes...
15:00	Prof. Rodolfo Cerrón-Palomino	Unravelling the Enigma of the 'Secret Language of the Incas'. Quechua, the lingua franca of Tawantinsuyu – surely this was the Incas' native tongue? Yet the linguistic clues reveal otherwise: the enigmatic Cantar de Tupac Yupanqui is no Quechua, nor even are such names as Vilcanota , Ollantaytambo , even Cuzco itself. The trail leads instead to Aymara, first 'official language of the Incas', and perhaps ultimately to the Puquina of Tiahuanaco – beguiling clues to the Incas' origin myths and their ultimate homeland...
15:45	COFFEE BREAK
16:00	Dr John Hemming	Inca Ruins in Vilcabamba: Finds, Feuds, Frauds and Fantasies.
17:00	WINE RECEPTION

- Timings for each paper include 10-15 minutes of audience questions.

SPEAKERS

Dr Colin McEwan

Head of the Americas Section, and curator of the Latin American Collections, British Museum

Prof. Willem Adelaar

University of Leiden, Netherlands

Eminent Andean linguist, lead author of Languages of the Andes.

Prof. Peter Kaulicke

Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú, Lima

Eminent Andean archaeologist, editor of Boletín de Arqueología PUCP.

Prof. William Isbell

State University of New York at Binghamton

Eminent Andean archaeologist, co-editor of the series Andean Archaeology.

Dr David Beresford-Jones

McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, University of Cambridge

Specialist in the archaeology of the Peruvian south coast and the interface with linguistics.

[co-organiser of the Cambridge, London and Lima symposia programme]

Dr Paul Heggarty

McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, University of Cambridge

Historical linguist specialised in the interface with archaeology, and in Andean languages.

[co-organiser of the Cambridge, London and Lima symposia programme]

Prof. Rodolfo Cerrón-Palomino

Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú, Lima

Eminent Andean linguist, prolific author of standard reference works in Andean linguistics (Quechua, Aymara, Mochica, Uro).

Dr John Hemming

Director (retired), Royal Geographical Society

Renowned author of The Conquest of the Incas and Monuments of the Incas, as well as a three-volume history of the indigenous peoples of Brazil, and Tree of Rivers: The Story of the Amazon.